IIT ROORKEE · FIRST SEMESTER

CAMPUS LIFE

FIRST IMPRESSIONS: A BITTERSWEET BEGINNING

When I first arrived at IIT Roorkee, I was excited and a little sad. I mean, I was joining one of the most prestigious colleges in India, but at the same time, I was leaving my home behind. It was a bittersweet feeling, but the happiness and pride on my parents' faces made all that sadness wash away.

I was absolutely awestruck when I first laid my eyes on the James Thomason building. However, that sense of awe quickly faded when I went to take a look at my department building, the Physics Department. The building looked like it had witnessed some real horror stuff. And honestly, standing next to the Mathematics Department building, it looked even more Mughal-era old.

As for my daily life, it has now become a repetitive loop of waking up, going to the lecture halls, coming back to the bhawan, and sleeping. No kidding. It's almost like my life is running on a four-step algorithm with absolutely no exciting output.

But jokes apart, I'm actually enjoying this routine. IIT Roorkee has slowly started feeling like a second home to me. Although, I miss my mum's cooking so much that I regularly travel all the way back home just to get a taste of her delicious, handmade food. Because let's be honest, no matter how prestigious your college is, nothing beats ghar ka khana.

THOMSO: MORE THAN JUST A FEST

Thomso was an amazing experience, with dance battles, rap, singing competitions, and loads of talent. The Pro-Nites were definitely the highlight, an 8/10, with two points deducted because, thanks to the mismanagement, we had to stand for TWO WHOLE HOURS doing absolutely nothing in an insanely crowded area. We got to experience some incredible artists, including Javed Ali, Dhvani Bhanushali, and Darshan Raval.

The Thomason building looked especially beautiful under the moonlight, but honestly, the best part wasn't even the fest itself, it was my amazing friends who made the whole experience so much more memorable. :)

NIGHT OUTS: NO PLANS, JUST VIBES

Night outs with friends hit different. The stupid games, the never-ending laughter, the random conversations, and the freedom to do absolutely nothing and still have the time of our lives. No fancy plans, no special occasions, just us being us.

And honestly, these are the kind of memories I'll probably miss the most when college is over.
